PLEASE RETURN

The Montana Centennial is in full stride. Across the state citizens are celebrating Statehood with literally hundreds of commemorative projects and events as diverse as the landscape.

From the earliest recorded history, painters, poets and song writers have recorded Montana's genesis with a creative tradition that continues today in the work of contemporary Montana poet, Wallace D. McCrae. He captured some of our state's unique spirit in his poem The Yellowstone written at the request of the Montana Department of Highways for use on a historic marker located at a rest area on Interstate 94 west of Hysham.

THE YELLOWSTONE

Millions of buffalo curried her flanks
as she shed winter's ice in the spring.
In the smoke of ten thousand campfires
she heard drum beats and war dances ring.
On the crest of her bosom, she sped Captain Clark and Sacajawea as well.
She bisected praire, the plains and the mountains
from her birthplace in "John Colter's Hell."
To the trav'ler she whispered, "Come follow me."
with a wink and a toss of her head.
She tempted the trapper, gold miner and gambler to lie down by her sinuous bed.
"Safe passage", she murmured provocativley.
"Safe passage and riches as well."
She smiled as the thread of Custer's blue line followed her trails and then fell.
She carved out the grade for the railroads;
Took settlers to there new home;
Watered thier stock, watered the fields,
and let them grow crops on her loam.
Her banks were the goal of the trail herds.
Her grass was the prize that they sought.
'Till the blizzards of 'eighty six and seven nearly killed off the whole lot.
"Don't boss her, don't cross her." Let her run free,
and damn you don't dam her at all.
She's a wild old girl, let her looks not deceive you. . .
But we love her in spite of it all
